

Abstract

A method and a computer system for computing and displaying a phase space relating the performance of a variable to its volatility in an intuitive and interactive way. The method and system enables a comparison of the performances of different stock values and the development of the performance over time. Further, a sub-space of the phase space is determined corresponding to a certain probability threshold of the variables considered.